"there was a remarkable women named Katherine Johnson and she was the first colored women to Help launch the first successful US man in space. She was also a mathematician working at NASA."

"when Katherine first started working at NASA she was only known as a computer, all she did was Calculate things with other colored women in a Separate building from the whites"

"Katherine was in an environment where it was mostly white men, and the colored people were Made to work in a separate building, so when Katherine was sent to help with the launch she was not allowed to do a lot of things, like she could not go to the bathroom, or use the same coffee pot as the whites"

"So if she was being segregated so badly then why did she stay and keep going through that Instead of just leaving and finding a new job"?

"working at NASA was obviously a big accomplishment, they were recruited because they were really good with calculating numbers And she left the "computer pool" because she was The best with numbers so they had her calculate The launch and landing calculations".

"The computing pool was filled with all colored women who were calculating the numbers For whatever assignment they were assigned, they got their assignments from the assistant who Gave them to them".

They didn't have computers yet so that is what the African american women were for. To calculate the work that a computer would do for us".

This is another wonderful african american NASA worker. She was a very prominent african american IBM specialist since she was even the one who had really got it to start working in the first place. They

Well I don't believe that they were equally

Katherine had done something really important in American history like help our country through the Space Race while Christine had really just operated the IBM.

Camera switches over the Erin

Well I agree with you Destiny but I also believe that they had received the same treatment concerning the Jim Crow Laws of segregation.

Camera switches to Jacob

I fully agree with what both of you said but nonetheless they were both magnificent but Katherine had truly changed history.

Slideshow of various pictures show

Katherine Johnson was a true American. She loved country even though her country didn't love her. She had helped out her oppressors while also Trying to help herself out as well. That is who Katherine Johnson was and how she will always be Remembered in history.
